Detailed information about the features page is on the next page.

Properties

In this software solution, users can define unique properties for categories. These defined features are automatically inherited from the subcategories of the specified category. During the definition of properties, users specify various parameters regarding the types of data to be entered for these properties. Among these parameters;

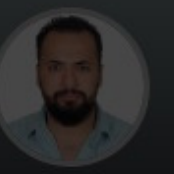

- * Whether the feature for each product will be entered once or more than once as test data,
- * Whether the feature will be highlighted on product listing pages or not,
- * Whether it will be included in the catalogs to be created or not,
- * There are options such as whether to use it as a filter or not during the search phase.

In addition, a unit definition is made appropriate to the type of feature to be entered and relevant units are assigned to these features. Users can set different data entry restrictions for the properties they define. Among these;

- * You can choose from a drop-down box (Combobox),
- * Values in a certain numerical range (Range),
- * Uploading files or images,
- * Various options are available, such as text entry.

Additionally, the identified features can be linked to previously created details. This integration enables data to be presented in a visual and meaningful way, allowing products and services to be expressed in more detail and personalized.

You can apply comprehensive tests based on the group characteristics you have specifically determined for your products. These tests should be supported by data from users' real-world experiences, in addition to data collected at the factory. This approach allows you to evaluate the performance of products more accurately and in detail, resulting in more reliable and comprehensive results.
